

5. References

- Hobson, J., & Cook, S. (2011). Social media for researchers: opportunities and challenges. MAI Review, 3.
- Kennedy, V. (2010). Social network analysis and research with Māori collectives. Mai Review, 3.
- Media Research Team (2005). The portrayal of Māori and te ao Māori in broadcasting: the foreshore and seabed issue. Wellington: Broadcasting Standards Authority.
- Ministry of Business, Innovation and Enterprise (2015). Māori me te Ao Hangarau 2015/The Māori ICT Report 2015. Accessed 19 February via: <http://www.mbie.govt.nz/publications-research/publications/economic-development/maori-ict-report-2015.pdf>
- Nairn, R., McCreanor, T., Moewaka Barnes, A., Borell, B., Rankine, J., & Gregory, A. (2012). "Maori news is bad news": that's certainly so on television. MAI Journal 1(1), 38-49.
- Ross, K., Fountaine, S., & Comrie, M. (2014). Facing up to Facebook: politicians, publics and the social media(ted) turn in New Zealand. Media, Culture and Society 37(2), 251-269.
- Sciascia, A. (2016). Māori cultural revitalisation in social networking sites. Wellington: Te Puni Kōkiri.
- Sciascia, A. (2015). Negotiating Place, Negotiating Identity – Rangatahi Māori in Facebook. Space, Place and Environment. Geographies of Children and Young People, 1-19.
- Stuart, I. (1996). Tauwi and Maori media: The indigenous view. Pacific Journalism Review 2:102-112.
- Stuart, I. (2003). The Construction of a National Maori Identity by Maori Media. Pacific Journalism Review 1:45-58.
- Waitoa, J., Scheyvens, R., & Warren, T R. (2015). E-Whanaungatanga: The role of social media in Māori political empowerment. An International Journal of Indigenous Peoples, 1:45-58.